Behaviour has good and bad traits. The good traits are pretty admirable unlike the bad traits. Good behaviour has familiar phrases like; 'thank you', 'sorry', 'excuse me', 'please' and many other words that express respect.

A person with good behaviour is respected and loved in any community. Such a human being obeys the rules, the laws and regulations of a community. However, Kingo was not of good behaviour. He was a very troublesome boy in Kasokwe village where he lived with his parents. Kingo's parents did whatever they could but failed to change him from his weird behaviour.

Kingo could pick what did not belong to him from people's homes. He could also fight with his mates. Worst of all, Kingo had refused to go to school. This caused more trouble of him in their village. Everyone in this village became upset due to the insecurity Kingo had caused around them.

Kisimbi, Kingo's father made up his mind to report to the area police about his son's matters. On one fateful Monday, Kingo was got stealing a cock from Mzee Maya's farm. The villagers alarmed so loudly that the police heard and arrived so fast at the scene before he would be stoned to death.

Kingo was arrested and taken to police. At the police station, he pleaded with the security personnel because his father swore never to plead on his behalf due to the shame he could bring him. Kingo promised to turn into a new leaf. Mzee Maya forgave him and requested the police to release him since he was his friend's son. He was set free to return to his parents. Since that incident, King became a good boy and Kasokwe village remained peaceful.
